ON THE TOP RUNG

BOSTON HAS A CLEAR LEAD IN THE LEAGUE BACE

Breitenstein of the Browns Curls the Hair of the Orioles and as a Consequence the Bean-Paters Leave

Their Competitors Standing Willie They Cavort Onward Toward the Fennant Goal. News From the Sports.

Breitenstein curled the bair of the Baltimore boys yesterday and as a result Bow ton stands at the head of the League this morning, with its feet planted firmly on the top rung.

The clubs were tied. Boston won, as Boston always does when it comes to the scratch. Breitenstein of St. Louis is responsible. The Baltimore boys could not intercept his curves, while the Brownshild no difficulty in pounding Hawke out of the box and when McMahon was subinited, they also gave him alively brush. In the eighth inning the Orioles made a hard struggle for the game and piled up live tallies, but that was two too few, and as a consequence Boston, bumptions, rowdy Boston, is walking away today from the rest of the Leadure.

One day a high official of the Persian court became filled with a desire to see the artist at work, and with this object he walked into the studio without invitation. The painter threw him out and shut the door, but the great man was determined to carry out his plan. He returned to the studio, broke open the door and re-entered the room. The angry artist fell upon the official and painted his face a bright color. Fearing the displeasure of the great man and his friends he then fled from the studio. But the happy thought came to him to seek the slinh, "Fear not," said his majesty, after hearing the report of the artist. Leadon's Collection of Helmets of Firemen Killed on Duty. Few people, according to one of Messrs. Cassell's publications, know that at the headquarters of the Metropolitan fire brigade in Southwark there is a room containing sad and grewsome mementos of some of the greatest conflagrations in London. These are none other than the helmets of firemen who have been killed in the execution of their duty. The collection was started in 1868 by the late commanding One can see at a glance that the loss of life has been comparatively small, because the helmets are few in num ber. But they are black and battered, erushed into almost unrecognizable shapes, and to each a card is attached, telling in brief official language who was the owner, and how and where he met his death. They are a strange contrast to the bright, glittering headgear we see worn by firemen, as, seated on the engine, they dash to the scene of some outburst of the flery demon. They are all charred by the flames; some are dinted and burst, while others look as if a traction engine had passed over them. Here is one: The top part has been completely carried away, the rest is jagged and black, and the chin guard cut in twain. Only a piece of battered old brase to the redinary eye, but when it was a clear burnished belimet its owner was a here. The official card has the following: "Joseph Ford, who died from injuries received at the fire

Lying on a plece of sacking are the remnants of the clothing and so contrements of a firemum named Jacobs, who, being literally hammed in a blazing room, was rounted to death at There is but half a yard of charred coat left; the leather pouch is all scornbed and burnt; there are his key and hatchet, never to be used again, while the believe is blackened flames, but otherwise little injured. As belinet after belinet is turned over and examined, one can not help thinking of must have endured. The collection is
